New Course!

SOCL 125M: Sociology of Refugees, Asylum, & Forced Migration

TuTh 9:30-10:50a | Remote/Asynchronous | David FitzGerald

This course analyzes the origins of refugee flows, government policies, the role of non-governmental organizations, and refugees' experiences. It explores the debates about who is a refugee, how refugees decide when and where to move, the centrality of violence and persecution, and the place of refugees within the broader category of forced migration. The theoretical discussion engages concrete examples drawn from around the world in countries of origin, asylum, resettlement, and return.

Sociology Majors:

This course will apply towards the following concentrations: Law & Society, & International Studies